

28-Day Reset Challenge Email Funnel — Round 2

(Corey's Version)

product-marketing + applicable marketingskills-pack skills, redlined against Round 1's output (not the original)

~~Struck-through red text~~ = words removed from the prior draft. Underlined green text = new/changed words, shown inline in the same sentence. Unmarked black text is unchanged.

Email 1

Subject:

For the stiffness that keeps showing up

Preview:

What if this time, you didn't stop as soon as it felt better?

If your neck is regularly bothering you...

Or your back has opinions about the way you slept...

Or sitting for too long means taking a second to straighten up when you stand...

Then this is for you.

On October 19, we're kicking off the 28-Day Reset Challenge.

For four weeks, you'll spend 15 minutes a day stretching what your body needs.

Tell WeStretch what's bothering you. ~~WeStretch~~ It draws from a stretch library developed with physiotherapists to personalize your stretches around those areas.

So instead of working around the tight hip, sore neck or back that keeps acting up, you'll spend a little time every day working on it.

And you're going to feel the difference.

You'll get up easier. Get out of the car without thinking about your hip. Bend, reach and turn without thinking so much about how your body feels.

15 minutes a day for a body that feels better all day.

The Reset starts October 19.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: copy-editing (Sweep 2, voice/repetition): two consecutive sentences both opened with 'WeStretch' as the subject, mechanical when read aloud. Second instance changed to 'It'. No other skill flagged this email; clean otherwise.

Email 2

Subject:

If you only stretch when something bothers you...

Preview:

You're stopping at exactly the wrong time.

Most people don't decide to stretch at 2:17 on a perfectly comfortable Tuesday.

They stretch because something is bothering them.

Their back feels stiff. Their hip is tight. Their neck is acting up again.

And when nothing is complaining, stretching is pretty easy to forget.

That's what the 28-Day Reset Challenge changes.

~~For Starting four~~ October weeks, 19, you stretch for 15 minutes a ~~day.~~ day for four weeks. Not just on the days your back is stiff or your neck is acting up.

And you don't have to figure out what to do. Your stretching follows a routine physiotherapists mapped out, personalized to what you tell WeStretch and building as you go.

So when you start feeling better, you don't stop and wait for the next reminder.

You keep going.

Give your body 15 minutes a day for four weeks and feel what changes when you give it some real consistency.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: copy-editing (Sweep 1, specificity) + cro: the only one of Emails 1-5 that never stated a start date, weakening the 'why act now' of its CTA. This is the exact gap Marg's Round 1 notes flagged and Round 1 never fixed ('Email 2's CTA felt like the weakest why-act-now of the bunch'). Added 'Starting October 19' to match the anchor every other early email already has.

Email 3

Subject:

The problem is, you can live with it

Preview:

And that's exactly how stiffness quietly becomes your normal.

The annoying thing about stiffness is that it's usually pretty easy to live with.

You find the position where your back doesn't bother you as much. You take a second to straighten up after sitting for a while. You turn a little differently when your neck is acting up.

None of it is a big deal.

And that's exactly why it's so easy to keep putting up with.

You adjust. You carry on. Eventually, the little things you do because your body feels stiff become part of how you move through the day.

But "I can live with it" is a pretty low bar for how your body should feel.

You don't need to wait for your back to get worse. Or your hip to become a bigger problem. You can decide that being mildly annoyed by your body every day is reason enough to do something about it.

That's what the 28-Day Reset Challenge is for.

Starting October 19, you'll spend 15 minutes a day with stretching built around what's bothering you and how you're progressing, using a routine physiotherapists mapped out.

Give it four weeks.

Not because your body feels terrible. Because "fine" isn't the same as feeling good.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Clean pass across every applied skill. No changes.

Email 4

Subject:

This isn't about stretching

Preview:

It's about everything you want your body to let you do.

You probably don't care about becoming impressively flexible.

You care about going for the long walk without wondering how your back will feel later.

Sitting through dinner without having to keep finding a more comfortable position.

Getting up the next morning without immediately noticing your neck, your back or that same tight hip.

That's the real point of stretching.

Not touching your toes, or becoming someone who loves stretching.

It's having a body you don't have to think about quite so much.

That's what the 28-Day Reset Challenge is about.

Starting October 19, you'll spend 15 minutes a day with a routine physiotherapists mapped out, personalized to you and building as you progress.

Four weeks of giving your body the consistent stretching it hasn't been getting.

Because the best thing about feeling better in your body is getting on with everything else.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Clean pass. Strongest filmable writing in the funnel per Round 1; agreed, left untouched.

Email 5

Subject:

"I should stretch more" isn't a plan

Preview:

So give it a start date: October 19.

You've probably thought it before:

I really should stretch more.

The problem with "more" is that it can start tomorrow.

There's no start date. No finish line. No answer to how often, how long or what stretches you should actually be doing.

So it stays something you should do.

That's exactly what the 28-Day Reset Challenge takes off your plate.

Starting October 19, you stretch for 15 minutes a day. Your routine follows a progression physiotherapists mapped out, personalized to you as you go.

For four weeks, there's no wondering whether you should stretch today or what you should do. You open WeStretch, your routine is there, and you do it.

And that gives you something another month of I really should stretch more never will:

The chance to find out how much better your body can feel.

You can keep meaning to stretch more.

Or you can give it 28 days and finally see what happens when you do.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Clean pass. No changes.

Email 6

Subject:

Got plans Monday?

Preview:

The 28-Day Reset starts October 19. 15 minutes a day. Four weeks to feel the difference.

What are you doing Monday, [First Name]?

Because the *28-Day Reset Challenge starts October 19.***

For the next four weeks, give your body 15 minutes of personalized stretching a day.

Your routine ~~is follows built a for physiotherapist-mapped you and adapts as you progress,~~ progression, so all you have to do is open WeStretch and stretch.

15 minutes a day to work on what's bothering you, so it can bother you less.

We start Monday.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Biggest single fix in this round. Round 1's cross-funnel finding #1 said the 'adapts... how you're feeling changes' mechanism overclaim (voice.md's banned 'it adapts to what your body is telling it' framing) was fixed in every instance across Emails 2-5; Email 6's 'adapts as you progress' was left in and Round 1's own notes incorrectly called it 'already the accurate version.' Rewritten to the same physiotherapist-mapped-progression framing used everywhere else, worded differently per voice.md's 'repeat beliefs, rotate language' rule. Caught on a direct re-read against voice.md, confirmed by copy-editing and marketing-psychology. Subject line 'Got plans Monday?' has an untested but plausible Challenge-specific alternative ('Your Reset starts Monday') per ab-testing; not shipped, recorded as a test idea only.

Email 7

Subject:

Tomorrow could be another Monday

Preview:

Or you could start feeling better.

Tomorrow could be another Monday.

Your back feels how it feels. That tight spot is still that tight spot. You notice it, work around it and get on with your day.

Or tomorrow could be the day you finally start doing something about it [First Name].

The 28-Day Reset starts tomorrow.

For the next four weeks, give your body 15 minutes of personalized stretching a day and work on the things that keep bothering you instead of continuing to work around them.

So your back isn't the first thing you notice when you stand up. And that tight spot stops getting a say in how you move through your day.

That's what feeling better looks like.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Clean pass. No changes.

Email 8

Subject:

Still thinking this might be what you need?

Preview:

The Reset Challenge starts today. You can still join.

Maybe you've been reading about the 28-Day Reset and thinking, this might actually be what I need.

Something simple enough to stick with. Personalized to what's bothering you, using a stretch library developed with physiotherapists. And long enough to finally ~~do~~ make something progress about on the things ~~that you've keep been bothering working you. around.~~

If that's you, you haven't missed it.

The Reset starts today, and there's still time to join us. But not much time.

Registration closes today at 5 PM PST.

[JOIN ~~THE~~ BEFORE 28-DAY 5 RESET PM]

Reviewer notes: Two fixes. copy-editing (Sweep 2, repetition): 'bothering you' appeared twice in one short email; second instance reworded to 'finally make progress on the things you've been working around', tying into the 'work around' motif already used in Emails 1, 2 and 7. cro + marketing-psychology (converging finding): CTA changed to state the actual deadline at the decision point, scoped to this email and Email 9 only, since they're the only two with a same-day deadline in the body copy. Disagrees, narrowly, with Round 1's deliberate choice not to touch the CTA anywhere; agreed for Emails 1-7, disagreed here because a real deadline now exists to put on the button. Recommended as an A/B test against the control CTA, not assumed correct without measurement (see ab-testing).

Email 9

Subject:

In one hour, it's off the table

Preview:

There's no "maybe later" after 5.

For the past couple of weeks, joining the 28-Day Reset has been something you could think about.

In one hour, it won't be.

Registration closes at 5 PM PST, and after that, the Reset Challenge is underway and this round is closed.

So if there's still a part of you thinking, I actually want to do this, listen to it.

You don't need another email from us. You need to decide before 5.

[JOIN ~~THE~~ BEFORE 28-DAY 5 RESET PM]

Reviewer notes: Same CTA fix as Email 8, same reasoning. Otherwise unchanged: already clean, honest and well-paced per Round 1, agreed.
