

28-Day Reset Challenge Email Funnel — Round 3

westretch-direct-response-marketing review, redlined against the original draft

~~Struck-through red text~~ = words removed from the prior draft. Underlined green text = new/changed words, shown inline in the same sentence. Unmarked black text is unchanged.

Email 1

Subject:

For the stiffness that keeps showing up

Preview:

What if this time, you didn't stop as soon as it felt better?

If your neck is regularly bothering you...

Or your back has opinions about the way you slept...

Or sitting for too long means taking a second to straighten up when you stand...

Then this is for you.

On October 19, we're kicking off the 28-Day Reset Challenge.

For four weeks, you'll spend ~~just~~ 15 minutes a day stretching what your body needs.

Tell WeStretch what's bothering you, and your stretches are personalized around those areas.

So instead of working around the tight hip, sore neck or back that keeps acting up, you'll spend a little time every day actually working on it.

And you're going to feel the difference.

You'll get up easier. Move more comfortably. Bend, reach and turn without thinking so much about how your body feels.

15 minutes a day for a body that feels better all day.

The Reset starts October 19.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Awareness: problem-aware. Strong, filmable hook, kept as-is. Only edit: cut filler 'just' (voice.md lists it as a word that does no work). This is where Karen could fork a lapsed-pro-specific opening beat if she decides to segment (see review doc) -- not built here, that's her call.

Email 2

Subject:

If you only stretch when something bothers you...

Preview:

You're stopping at exactly the wrong time.

Most people don't decide to stretch at 2:17 on a perfectly comfortable Tuesday.

They stretch because something is bothering them.

Their back feels stiff. Their hip is tight. Their neck is acting up again.

And when nothing is complaining, stretching is pretty easy to forget.

That's what the 28-Day Reset Challenge changes.

For four weeks, you stretch for ~~just~~ 15 minutes a day. Not ~~just~~ only on the days your back is stiff or your neck is acting up.

And you don't have to figure out what to do. ~~Your~~ Physiotherapists already mapped what your stretching is should personalized look to like you next, and adapts WeStretch as runs you that progress plan and for how you, you're four feeling weeks changes. in a row.

So when you start feeling better, you don't stop and wait for the next reminder.

You keep going.

Give your body 15 minutes a day for four weeks and feel what changes when you give it some real consistency.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Awareness: problem-aware moving into solution-aware. Voice violation fixed: 'adapts as you progress and how you're feeling changes' is the exact observational-learning framing voice.md bans ('gets to know you', 'watches how you move'). Rewritten as the authorized physiotherapist-mapped-schedule claim, which is also the stronger, more honest trust claim per positioning.md. Also cut two filler 'just' instances.

Email 3

Subject:

The problem is, you can live with it

Preview:

And that's exactly how stiffness quietly becomes your normal.

The annoying thing about stiffness is that it's usually pretty easy to live with.

You find the position where your back doesn't bother you as much. You take a second to straighten up after sitting for a while. You turn a little differently when your neck is acting up.

None of it is a big deal.

And that's exactly why it's so easy to keep putting up with.

You adjust. You carry on. Eventually, the little things you do because your body feels stiff ~~just~~ become part of how you move through the day.

But "I can live with it" is a pretty low bar for how your body should feel.

You don't need to wait for your back to get worse. Or your hip to become a bigger problem. You can decide that being mildly annoyed by your body every day is reason enough to do something about it.

That's what the 28-Day Reset Challenge is for.

Starting October 19, you'll spend 15 minutes a day ~~with~~ on stretching a personalized routine built from a physiotherapist-mapped progression, matched to you, how what you're ~~feeling~~ working on and ~~how where you're you progressing-~~ are in it.

Give it four weeks.

Not because your body feels terrible. Because "fine" isn't the same as feeling good.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Same voice violation fixed as Email 2 ('how you're feeling ... how you're progressing' -> physiotherapist-mapped progression). Minor filler cut ('just become part of'). Closing bolded line is a strong, on-brand example of reframing without blame -- kept as-is.

Email 4

Subject:

This isn't really about stretching

Preview:

It's about everything you want your body to let you do.

You probably don't care about becoming impressively flexible.

You care about going for the long walk without wondering how your back will feel later.

Sitting through dinner without having to keep finding a more comfortable position.

Getting up the next morning without immediately noticing your neck, your back or that same tight hip.

That's the real point of stretching.

Not touching your toes. Not becoming someone who loves stretching.

Having a body you don't have to think about quite so much.

That's what the 28-Day Reset Challenge is about.

Starting October 19, you'll spend 15 minutes a day ~~with~~ on stretching personalized physiotherapists to already you mapped out for you, with hold times and ~~adapted~~ difficulty stepping up on a schedule as you ~~progress and how you're feeling changes-~~ go.

Four weeks of ~~giving your body the~~ consistent ~~stretching~~ stretching, it on hasn't a been schedule getting- instead of only when something's bothering you.

Because the best thing about feeling better in your body is getting on with everything else.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Subject/preview are the funnel's clearest expression of voice.md's 'what we're really selling' thesis -- kept exactly. Two fixes: the same personalization violation as Emails 2-3; and 'the consistent stretching it hasn't been getting' softened, since as written it mildly implies the reader has been neglecting their body (brushes against 'nobody should feel like they've failed'). Rewritten to tie back to Email 2's actual insight (reactive vs. scheduled stretching) instead of a personal shortfall.

Email 5

Subject:

"I should stretch more" isn't a plan

Preview:

So give it a start date: October 19.

You've probably thought it before:

I-~~really~~ should stretch more.

The problem with "more" is that it can start tomorrow.

There's no start date. No finish line. No answer to how often, how long or what stretches you should actually be doing.

So it stays something you should do.

That's exactly what the 28-Day Reset Challenge takes off your plate.

Starting October 19, you stretch for 15 minutes a day. Your routine ~~is~~ follows personalized a to physiotherapist-mapped you progression and already adapts built as for you four progress weeks, and how so you're ~~feeling never changes-~~ guessing what's next.

For four weeks, there's no wondering whether you should stretch today or what you should do. You open WeStretch, your routine is there, and you do it.

And that gives you something another month of ~~I good really-should stretch more~~ intentions never will:

The chance to find out how much better your body can ~~actually~~ feel.

You can keep meaning to stretch more.

Or you can give it 28 days and finally see what happens when you do.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Personalization violation fixed again. Also: cut 'really' from the opening thought so it matches the subject line exactly ('I should stretch more') -- the whole email's hook depends on that internal-monologue phrase landing as exact recognition. Cut the literal repeat of that same line at the close (voice.md flags 'repeating the opening line at the end to close the loop' as a device that reads as manufactured) and cut a stray 'actually.'

Email 6

Subject:

Got plans Monday?

Preview:

The 28-Day Reset starts October 19. 15 minutes a day. Four weeks to feel the difference.

What are you doing Monday, [First Name]?

Because the 28-Day Reset Challenge starts October 19.

For the next four weeks, give your body 15 minutes of personalized stretching a day.

Your routine is built for you and adapts as you progress, so all you have to do is open WeStretch and stretch.

15 minutes a day to work on what's bothering you, so it can bother you less.

That's the deal.

We start Monday.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: No copy changes -- 'adapts as you progress' here has no feelings clause attached and is the compliant version of the phrase; it's the model for how the other emails should read. Flagging instead: per the 17-step sequence (step 13, reveal the price), this is the natural slot for price/billing/trial terms, and the sequence never states them anywhere in nine emails. [VERIFY: 28-Day Reset price, billing cadence, refund/cancellation terms] before send -- see review doc 'Critical gap' section.

Email 7

Subject:

Tomorrow could ~~just~~ be another Monday

Preview:

Or you could start feeling better.

Tomorrow could ~~just~~ be another Monday.

Your back feels how it feels. ~~Your neck does what it does.~~ That tight spot is still ~~that tight spot~~ there.
You notice it, work around ~~it~~ it, and get on with your day.

Or tomorrow could be the day you finally start doing something about it, [First Name].

The 28-Day Reset starts tomorrow.

For the next four weeks, give your body 15 minutes of personalized stretching a day and work on the things that keep bothering you instead of continuing to work around them.

So your back isn't the first thing you notice when you stand up. Your neck isn't something you keep checking on. And that tight spot stops getting a say in how you move through your day.

That's what feeling better looks like.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Cut filler 'just' from subject and opening line to match. The symptom list is the fourth near-identical three-item list by this point in the sequence (Emails 1, 2, 3 all use the device) -- voice.md notes threes get 'automatic' with overuse; trimmed to two items here for variety. Left the closing triad alone, one strong triad per email is fine.

Email 8

Subject:

Still Registration thinking closes this at might 5 be PM what you need? today

Preview:

The Doors Reset are Challenge open starts until 5 PM PST today. ~~You can still join.~~

Maybe you've been reading about the 28-Day Reset and thinking, this might actually be what I need.

Something simple enough to stick with. Personalized to your body. And long enough to finally do something about the things that keep bothering you.

If that's you, you haven't missed it.

The Reset starts today, and there's still time to join us. But not much time.

Registration closes today at 5 PM PST.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: Body copy is solid and unchanged. Subject/preview sharpened: the original subject fails voice.md's own checklist test ('could this appear in any wellness app? If yes, rewrite it') -- yes, it's generic. For a same-day deadline email, the real cutoff time is a stronger Attention hook than a soft question, so it's moved into the subject and the preview tightened to match.

Email 9

Subject:

In one hour, it's off the table

Preview:

There's no "maybe later" after 5.

For the past couple of weeks, joining the 28-Day Reset has been something you could think about.

In one hour, it won't be.

Registration closes at 5 PM PST, and after that, the Reset Challenge is underway and this round is closed.

So if there's still a part of you thinking, I actually want to do this, listen to it.

You don't need another email from us. You need to decide before 5.

[JOIN THE 28-DAY RESET]

Reviewer notes: No changes. Strongest email in the funnel: honest, specific, one CTA, genuine deadline, no oversell. Model for what the earlier urgency emails should sound like.
